Collecting priorities are directed at documenting lesser-known inventions and companies, as well as iconic artifacts with revitalization potential. 2017 highlights: Certificate of merit from the UK Computer Conservation Society for TechWorks! revitalization of the IBM S/360 printer, now in routine use by visitors to create souvenir green bar printouts. Restoration of GP-Link Apollo Lunar Module Simulator begins, staffed with engineers from original Link team. Collections are used in projects by Binghamton University students of Engineering, History, English, and Computer Science; and multiple community service projects, including coding robotic controls with Binghamton middle school students.

The Center's acquisition philosophy focuses on artifacts with the potential to be returned to functionality, as a critical feature in their ability to inspire technical creativity of future generations.
